

Advancing Clinical Decision Support Tools

What's driving usage and adoption?

Hospital and acute-care facility staff view clinical decision support (CDS) tools as a chief ingredient in improving patient care. That's according to a recent survey of clinicians and healthcare IT and business professionals conducted by HIMSS Media.*

Among those investing in best-of-breed solutions, most would use an open-source software solution to advance their CDS goals.

70%

view CDS tools as a top business priority

ONLY 40%

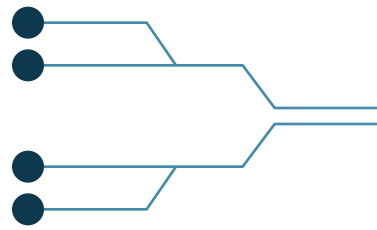

are highly satisfied with their current CDS solution

Top 2 adoption barriers

53%

workflow concerns

48%

perceived expense

DID YOU KNOW?

Red Hat is the world's open-source solutions leader.

Advancing CDS goals

50%

plan to build a custom CDS solution

90%

likely to use an open-source CDS solution

Count on Drools

the leading open source rules engine offered through Red Hat Decision Manager.

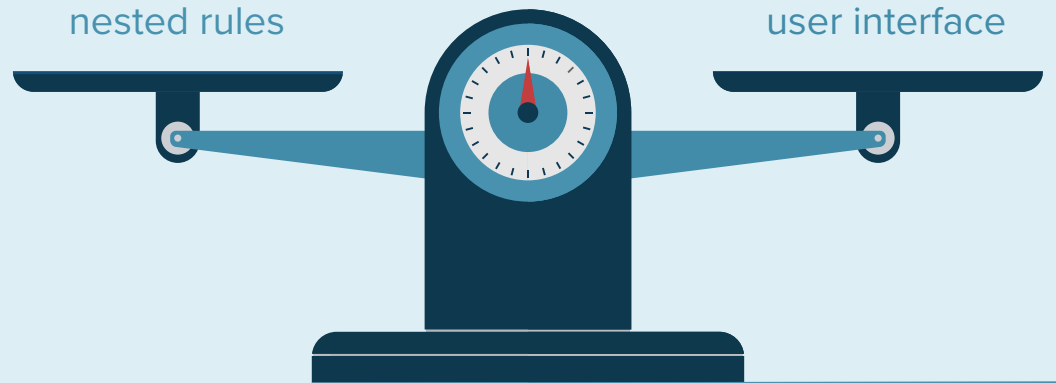

Desired capabilities

74%

want a system that can handle complex nested rules

73%

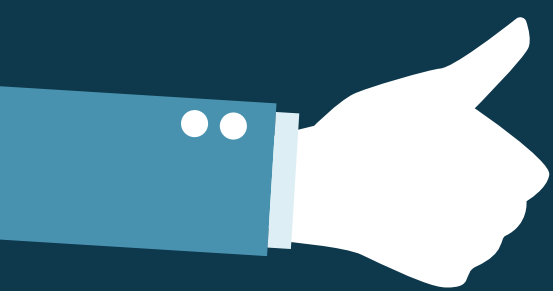

want a business-friendly user interface

Top satisfaction driver

78%

of those highly satisfied with their CDS tools have a continuous improvement feedback loop

Drive better patient care and outcomes through the world's open-source solutions leader.

LEARN MORE AT redhat.com/health.

*Advancing Clinical Decision Support, HIMSS Media Research Report, sponsored by Red Hat, July 2018. The survey was conducted online among 100 qualified IT, business and clinical professionals. Red Hat was not identified as the research sponsor.

As a connective hub in a global network of enterprises, partners, and open source communities, Red Hat provides healthcare solutions for 100% of the Global Fortune 500 Healthcare companies providing innovative technologies and healthcare solutions that improve patient care. Learn more at redhat.com/health.

